TO THE TEACHER:

The following suggestions and forms, if carefully followed, will conduce to uniformity and system. Originality is good in its place, but in the keeping of School Records, it is not well to change established forms without good reasons:

*For general lessons at this hour each day, the teacher may give the important news from a good daily, or read a selection from some primary science work, give a talk on great men, selecting one for each day, on ocean currents, volcanoes, geology, botany, zoology, easy experiments in natural philosophy, great inventions, how iron is made, how oil is procured, how gold and silver are mined, and many other subjects of interest and instruction.

PROGRAMMES—ARRANGE THEM FOR A PURPOSE.

Programmes should be so arranged that the mechanical studies—such as writing, map-drawing, and general work—will come in the afternoon, and after recess when practicable. If pupils study as they should during the forenoon and the first session in the afternoon, they will not have sufficient energy left for bright, wide-awake study during the last session, and the time can be more profitably spent in work that takes time but requires little thought.

TWO VITAL POINTS IN EDUCATION.

First. LEAD PUPILS INTO HABITS OF STUDY THAT WILL BEGET A HEALTHFUL GROWTH OF THE MENTAL FACULTIES.

The committing of facts does not necessarily secure mental development or increase mental power. The process of acquiring knowledge may do the mind more harm than good. "O, yes, you mean superficial study," I mean nothing of the kind. I refer to the method, character and habit of mental action. "Hard" and "thorough" study, so-called, sought after by earnest teachers and performed by faithful pupils, often does more harm than good. As is well stated in Welch's "How to Study," "Most of our hard-working, faithful students become the merest mopes—sheer plodders, stultified book-suckers. They learn by rote; originality is dwarfed. Their process of education is one of mere committing, 'thorough' though it may be. Instead of the healthful assimilation of knowledge which begets mental power, we find only the impressing and branding of facts in the form of spoken or written word-symbols, which though the pupil reproduces them in faultless language, are still mere impressions, undigested and unassimilated—a thing apart from the mind itself, which not only does not beget power, but becomes mere lumber and trammels the mind's productiveness and originality."

The wrong habit of study, however thorough, hard and faithful the work, may do, nay, often does do more harm than good. The result is, we find stultified, moping, plodding habits of thought where we ought to find bright, active, vigorous, original, keen, healthy minds. The boy can't solve the simplest problem in his father's business if it happens to contain some new condition not found in the book or not fitted to case and rule. More attention must be given to the manner and method of study and habit of thought. Pupils must be trained "How to Study."

Second. The DEVELOPMENT OF CHARACTER is of more IMPORTANCE THAN THE LEARNING OF BOOKS.

To cause pupils to grow in honesty, truthfulness, purity, unselfishness, nobility, integrity, love and honor is of far greater importance than to teach them Arithmetic, Grammar, and the rest of the common branches. And yet our schools spend nine-tenths of the time in acquiring a knowledge of the books, while Character Building is touched only incidentally in a general way, or not at all. How much Arithmetic, Grammar, or Geography would pupils catch "in a general way?" The Sciences would have to become more contagious than now "to be caught in a general way." But Character Building, the Development of Manhood and Womanhood, the weeding and pruning of the vices and watering and sunning of the virtues, the drawing out and building up of the character and affections—that part of pupils' nature which is all we respect and honor and love in actual life—that which makes men good citizens, honest business men, loyal in the family relations, true as friends—this must not be left to chance in our schools. It must not be left to a crude form of irregular "general instruction." It is worthy of a daily recitation and daily systematic drill—side by side with other branches. It should be made the most important study in our schools.

A recitation in it should be given daily. The drill should be scientific, close, systematic. Not until the teacher can make a Character chart of every pupil in his school and give him his per cent. in honesty, truthfulness, generosity, frankness, integrity, etc., and their opposites, has he begun to study their natures systematically so as to root out tares and sow wheat.

You ask, "how to do this work?" Every teacher can do it. There are good books outlining the subject; for example, Welch's "How to Study." And similar books. Any teacher who realizes the importance of this work can find a way to do it. If you appreciate this work, write me and I will take pleasure in helping you to set it on foot in your school. Let it not be said of any of our pupils hereafter, "They have committed the facts of the books, but can't use or apply them in solving the problems of life that each day brings," or "They have learned the common branches very well, but are untruthful, unloved, impure—in character, meaner than when they entered school."

For teachers who have Welch's "How to Study" it will be helpful to note

A Few Suggestions on Conducting a Class in "How to Study."

Suppose we take Lesson I.—Activity and Vigor of Thought. Pages 9 and 10.

1st.—Pupils read section 1, each reading one paragraph, all the class having books open.

2d.—All pupils close books, except one who reads the first paragraph, and then some pupil in the class is called on to give the subject of the paragraph just read. This exercise is continued over each paragraph of the lesson.

3d.—Some pupil of the class gives the substance of the whole lesson in his own language.

4th.—Teacher and pupils ask questions on points in the lesson and freely discuss topics suggested by it.

5th.—The teacher assigns the lesson to some pupil to write up the substance of it in his own language, and enlarge upon it, his essay to be read before the class at the close of the next day's recitation.

6th.—One or more pupils are assigned the work of bringing in selections from different authors, bearing on the topic of the lesson, and reading them before the class after the essay is read.

The order of work is followed in each lesson with such variation or modification as each teacher's tact may devise. The aim should be to make each recitation pleasant and the discussion free and enjoyable. The original essay, on former lesson and general supplementary reading, comes at the close of each lesson. I will take pleasure in corresponding with you about this work if you are interested.

SPECIAL RATES to Teachers using Welch's Classification Register.

How to Organize, Classify and Teach a Country School.

(Cloth bound, $1.00)

This book is especially adapted for Country School work.

It aims:

- To tell the most in the fewest words.
- To place before the teachers only what is practical.
- To enable teachers to classify their pupils and systematize their country school work.
- To reduce the number of classes to the minimum.
- To give teachers practical methods of presenting each branch.
- To help teachers to educate themselves at home.
- To lead teachers to the study of mental philosophy.
- To set before teachers points of school law with which every teacher should be familiar.

"All the learning of Lord Bacon would not enable a man to make a watch, unless he had first practiced the trade; all the science of Isaac Newton would not impart the power to navigate a ship, unless the captain had previously learned the art of seamanship; and the learning of both, combined, would not ENABLE A MAN TO MANAGE A DISTRICT SCHOOL, and attain the objects for which it was designed, without a careful study and practice of the principles of Teaching."

THOMAS HUNTER.

The book mentioned above is written for Country School Teachers. It contains nothing but what is practical—no theorizing, no superfluous words.

It will be especially helpful to teachers using WELCH'S CLASSIFICATION REGISTER, being published by the same author.

Special arrangements are made with County Superintendents who use the Classification Register and liberal discounts given to their teachers.

Terms quoted on application.
